

Royal London presents Lost for Words

Everybody has their own way of dealing with it. So, for me, I sit and cry a lot and use up a lot of tissues. [LAUGHS] And, while being sad that they've gone, also trying to remember, you know, how lucky was I to have met them in the first place.

We all went to Disneyland together. And this is my favourite memory of Bob, the Tower of Terror. Bob, at this point is already in a wheelchair, because he's had this stroke, but we don't know that it's a stroke, but he just can't walk for very long. So, he's in this wheelchair and he is laughing his head off, as we're dropping, and I'm like... [SCREAMS] And he's going... [CHUCKLES] ...laughing at us all. He had such a good time.

I think we have a very unhealthy attitude towards death and how we deal with that stuff. We don't even acknowledge it, really, in a way. I think a change in the attitude of not talking about things would help pretty much everybody, you know, because the only thing that we're all going to do is die. Most of us will pay taxes unless you've put them off in Panama and then you won't pay any taxes, so the rest of us will pay taxes and die. And that's the only thing that everybody is going to do. And so, everybody is going to have had an experience with death. And I think the more that we talk about that, the better.

Like, I've already, you know, in my head decided what I want to be done. I just want somebody to dig a hole in a forest and throw me in. I don't need a marker or anything else, because it's... For me, it's not about...there, that's where they are, cos they're not, that's not where they are, it's here and here and... [EXHALES] ...and all the things that they did. Those are the things that that person has left. That's where they are.

I'm unlikely to change the world. I'm not a neurosurgeon or a physicist or, you know, I'm not somebody who's going to have that kind of impact in the world. So, hopefully, what I'll be remembered for is just making the lives that people have got right now a little bit easier. What I would like most of all, I made some people happy, you know, that for an hour once a week, people forgot their troubles and had a nice time with me. Hopefully.

[LAUGHS]
